MRS. WOODEND CIRCUS RIDER

APPEARING WITH RANCH SHOW AS JANE HOWARD.

Bald to Be Wife of Dr. W. W. Woodend. Sho Made and Lost a Fortune as Broker She Used to Exhibit His Horses at Madison Square Garden.

A woman who rides in the 101 Ranch show under the name of Jane Howard was slightly injured in the performance on Tuesday night when her horse lost footing and she was thrown. She has a sprained ankle.

Jane Howard, the show people say, Mrs. William E. Woodend, the wife of Dr. William E. Woodend, head of the defunct brokerage firm of W. E. Woodend & Co. at 25 Broad street. She used to drive her husband's horses when he exhibited at Madison Square Garden.

According to those connected with the show Mrs. Woodend has appeared with it off and on during the four years it has been on the road. Her husband, the show people say, did not like the idea his wife appearing, and therefore her real name was never used in the company's advertising. In the summer, say, Mrs. Woodend spent a part of the time each year on the 101 Ranch in Oklahoma, where Miller Bros., proprietors of the ranch and of the show, built a small cottage for her. Jane Howard's part in the show was to ride a bronco in the quadrille, doing a fancy riding and picking up objects from the ground from her horse She also appeared in the opening and She has many friends in the show, and although it is said that these pretty generally knew who Jane Howard was they respected her wishes and said nothing outside about her identity. The women in the company all called her Jane. In travelling she has occupied a compartment in the sleeper and has been accompanied constantly by her maid.

Representatives of the show said ves-Representatives of the show said vesterday that after the accident Mrs Woodend was helped to her automobile and was driven to her home, at 58 West Seventy-first street. At her home yesterday a servant said that both Dr. and Mrs. Woodend were out of town, the latter in the West. The servant added that Mrs. Woodend left New York on her trip some two weeks or more ago. The that Mrs. Woodend left New York on her trip some two weeks or more ago. The woman injured in the show, the servant said, was another Woodend entirely, and not related in any way to Mrs. W. E. Woodend.

W. E. Woodend & Co. was one of the biggest brokerage houses on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. It was started about 1901 and had several branches Dr. Woodend, a young physician, was credited with having made $250,000 out of the business within a few months. The brokerage house failed in April, 1904, with liabilities said at the time to be about $180,000. Dr. Woodend was arrested on a charge of grand larceny, but was discharged the following September Judge Hough in the United States District Court granted him a discharge in bank-ruptcy in October, 1908. More recently he has been interested in the promotion of theatrical enterprises.

Dr. Woodend formerly owned a string of horses and his wife became well known

HIS LIFE IN FADED LETTERS Duncan J. McRea. Once an Architect.

Duncan J. McRea, once a prosperous architect, was found dead in a furnished rooming house at 23 Dominick street yesterday with a gas tube in his mouth.
His identity was learned from letters and newspaper clippings. Charles Bren- 1 pan, who has the furnished room house knew little except that McRea hired a cheap room four months ago and paid rent regularly.

McRea was about 70 years old. In clothes and papers of all sorts, including faded blue prints for houses, was an account book with the brokerage firm of Edward S. Hooley & Co., 15 Broad street. Mr. Hooley said last night that McRea had dealt with his firm for fifteen McRea had dealt with his firm for fifteen years, buying broken lots of small stocks. He was inclined to believe that McRea had a small income. He had a balance in his favor of $112.58.

There was a faded letter from a nephew. Charles McRea. dated 1867, and with a business address showing the nephew to be the head of a real estate firm at 49 Wall street. It asked the uncle for a list of houses he had on his list to rent for $10,000 a year. Another letter from the same nephew told of his father's death and of unavailing efforts to find Duncan McRea for the funeral.

A letter from J. Roosevelt Bayley. Bishop of Newark in 1868, congratulated McRea because he was making his mark in the world and thanked him for a newspaper clipping. McRea's name figured in a clipping of an account of a Michigan university alumni dinner held in 1871.

In the bureau was a letter from Herbert L. Satterlee on stationary of Ward Harden & Satterlee. It was dated December 17 last and acknowledged the receipt of a letter suggesting that kerosene lamps were good for reading for people with eye trouble.

Brennan said that McRea had told him he had been an architect forty-five years. McRea used to leave the house about noon every day and return about monders and the house about noon every day and return about monders and the house about noon every day and return about monders are the house about noon every day and return about monders of his time reading in public libraries.

The crowd in the corridor appeared to be more cheerful than it had been slice it was announced that those found guilty by a jury would probably get based upon a solution of the problem of how to get the Prime Minister to the imperial conference and the coronation. The obstacle to Canada being represented at the conference was the Conservative party in Parliament, which through its leader, R. L. Borden, had declared that it would only grant supplies to the Government upon terms regarded by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as impossible of clared that his first duty was to Canada and under the circumstances he would have to stay at home.

This morning Mr. Borden was hurredly summoned to Government House, when he had a brief meeting with Earl Groy the Governor-General.
